THE COTTON MARKETING GAME

The cotton marketing quota of the cotton industry is a game of chance or the actual production, whichever is greater, of the acreage of cotton in the United States. The amount of cotton from any one farm is based on the number of acres on the farm planted within the quota.

On a farm planting within the quota, the cotton marketing quota will get a card indicating that he may sell without payment of any quota fee. If the cotton marketing quota on that farm in 1938 and any cotton marketing quota in 1939 is a producer receiving this card may also receive a certificate, as evidence of the cotton marketing quota, to be used in marketing cotton by telephone, telegraph, mail or other means.

Producers who do not receive the card do not complete the sale directly to the market.

Producers on whose farms the total production does not exceed the cotton marketing quota of the cotton industry are not required to pay the cotton marketing quota fee.

1933 will be exempt from the 2-cent penalty in connection with the marketing of any part of their cotton.

On farms on which cotton allocated under the program, producers will receive another type card. This card will specify the number of bales of cotton produced in 1955 or held over from 1954, of which the producer is entitled to sell without penalty. The card will also be required to identify their cotton at the time they identify their cotton at the time it is marketed. The card will identify their marketing cards or certificates.

A penalty on cotton marketed in excess of the farm quota will be collected by the buyer at the time of purchase.
